Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.2in.Excerpt from A Bibliographical Account and Collation of La Description De Legypte: Presented to the Library of the London Institution The beautiful and extensive series of surveys of Egypt executed for the French Army, may be first noticed, since they belong equally to the classes of the Antiquities and of the modern state of the country. They consist chie y of fifty separate charts, partly founded on astronomical observations, forming one general topographical plan, executed with all the variety of information expressed by characters usually to be found in military maps, the minute details of which leave nothing more to be required in a repre scutation of this description: so that, says Fourier, there is not any region in Europe which is described in a manner more complete. The entire Geographical Chart in which the survey of Egypt is comprehended, extends from Balbec in Syria, to the ruins of Berenice on the northern borders of Nubia; and the Topographical plan itselfincludes all the country situated between the Cataracts of Syene Es Souan) to the Mediterranean Sea, and from the last buildings on the West of Alexandria to Sour, the ruins of the ancient Tyre. Within these limits are indicated the sites of both the ancient and existing cities of Egypt, with those of the several villages and hamlets, and of all other remarkable points; the exact geographical position of every remaining monument of antiquity being also particularly exhibited. T 0 this general survey were added separate plans of the ports and cities included within the region, and also of the relative situations of remarkable buildings in the same cities with regard to the Nile and the surrounding mountains. In these charts and surveys are...
