A LATE SPRING, AND AFTER (PAPERBACK)

Pinyon Publishing, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Robert B. Shaw explores the depths of experience, childhood, memory, and his midwestern roots: The days go slowly but the years go fast. / Old movies used to bridge the story's gaps / by morphing falling leaves to frantic snow. The heart of his book is a series of meditations on his wife's illness, passing, and what remains after--the vivid memories of time well-spent: We used to work / together at it, each on a different side, / she stirring, measuring, tasting, I / chopping, dicing, mincing as required. / Rocking the blade the way she showed me to, / I freed from each raw thing a smell we liked: / the garlic's earthy reek, the ginger's sting, / the anise wisping up from celery leaves. Robert B. Shaw anchors A Late Spring, and After with a group of beautiful elegies for his wife. These recall, in their deep feeling and stylistic distinction, Thomas Hardy's Poems of 1912-13. No less impressive are the other poems in this book. Time and again, Shaw brings his subjects to life with memorable description. Handles of tools look like lemon jelly petrified. A man smokes on a dark porch at night, making himself evident by inhaling, / rousing an ember-dot of hot vermilion. And the subjects themselves encompass an extraordinarily wide range of experience. Plants and animals, youth and age, private life and public history--everything is here in glorious enchantment and detail. --Timothy Steele Robert B. Shaw is the author of six books of poetry, the latest of which, Aromatics, was co-winner of The Poets Prize. For his prose work, Blank Verse: A Guide to Its History and Use, he received the...
