XXIV Recent Movements In The Order The rapid growth of the order is developing movements that seem likely to bring with them important changes. These movements are of two sorts, local and general. The general movement, produced by the increase in the number of neighboring castles and the resulting fraternizing in district conclaves and provinces, is toward a socializing, instead of the old individualism, in castle life and a deepening loyalty to the order. The local movement, occasioned by the increased age and permanence of local castles, is toward the enrichment of the rituals and of the local castle life. We must not be too hasty either in elaborating our forms so as to make them too difficult for the smaller or poorer castles, or in imposing upon the federated castles any burdens which...
