Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: . . . d'après les multiples variations squelettiques déterminées chez l'homme sous l'influence de variations fonctionnelles minimales relativement celles que nous envisageons ici. 1 In this same article the eminent Parisian anthropologist suggests that the destruction of the Java forests by some volcanic catastrophe--a phenomenon which the geologic records prove to have been of frequent occurrence in the island in Tertiary times--might have been the means of compelling a large-sized species of gibbon to resort to the erect attitude, and thus to accommodate himself in the best way possible to the circumstances arising from this unforeseen calamity. This hypothesis, with equal probability, might be extended so as to include the supposition that in such, or analogous, conditions there were two species of manlike apes, both of which assumed the erect attitude as a result of frequent and mortal combats for supremacy. It is not inconceivable that a powerful leader among one or other of the combatants might have distinguished himself by rushing on his enemies in a rampant attitude, wielding a piece of wood which he could even then well grasp, and thus by a combination of strategy and physical strength put them to flight. The heroic deed would be quickly imitated by foes as well as by friends, and in future his method would become the recognised mode of warfare. But these are mere speculations which it would be dangerous to pursue to greater length. 1 Revue Scientifique, vol. v. , 4th serice, 1896, p. 297. General Conclusions....
