Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Author s biography.I shall begin by the framework which has moulded my original view of the world - Warsaw between the two wars. Poland savoured its newly acquired independence, victoriously defended against the recent Bolshevik invasion. The all-new Polish army was commanded byformer Russian, Austrian and German officers, residents of Polish lands partitioned in the 18 century, who have opted for Poland.Such was the case of my father, former captain of German Hussars, who consolidated his new citizenship fighting the Russians in 1920 and the Germans in 1939, as captain of Polish Uhlans.Warsaw between the two wars was perhaps the most cosmopolitan city of the world. It counted about 30 of pure Poles, the rest divided among Jews, Russians, Germans, French, Armenians, etc. True, it was causingsome frictions, but the cultivated intelligentsia couldn t care less about religion and nationality, attributing them purely descriptive value. In short, I never heard about our Jewish origin.The revelation struck me like a lightning from the blue. Nazis invaded Poland and I was sent with my father to the Ghetto. .Down in the Ghetto, I was appalled by the horror of daily atrocities and started to envisage the escape. All sages tried to dissuade me: in the ghetto I have a chance to survive; the Germans need workforce; they cannot kill everybody (!). But at the other side, where they shootat sight during the curfew, I shall perish at the first evening, because nobody will let me enter a houseunder the death penalty.Finally, I did it my way and have survived the war, which proves the incidental superiority of intuition over logic.It s true, that I had an unheard-of fortune. The curfew approaching, I...
