Lucid Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 92 pages. According to Internet studies, the average person can lose up to 2 hours a day as a result of disorganization. People spend a lot of time looking for receipts, shoes, or keys. If you are losing time at home because of disorganization, then these habits can carry over to your job and other areas of your life. I had a client who claimed that she knew where everything was. When I helped her to de-clutter and get her home organized, she found a check from a now-closed account that was worth thousands. The check had been buried in a pile of unopened mail and other paperwork and had been collecting for years. What should have taken 10 or 15 minutes to run by the bank to make a quick deposit now took hours to correct. The pile also contained invitations to networking meetings and business leads that had been missed and were now worthless. The pile was a vivid testament to lost sales opportunities. People often find clutter overwhelming. If a person tends to save things that they might need, then clutter will start to accumulate. Those piles continue to grow until that person can no longer find the thing they might have needed in the first place. I recently organized some of my churchs closets. As I discovered buried treasures, a question came to mind. How much money had been spent replacing these beautiful and certainly forgotten items When it came time to decorate the church for Christmas, I was able to save the church several hundred dollars by recovering those tucked-away decorations. How many times have you made a repeat purchase because you couldnt find what you were looking for or didnt remember you had it Have you ever paid a...
