Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Abridged edition. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Coal Industry of Vancouver Island: In British Columbia, Canada The powerful winding engines rest so solidly and evenly on their massive bedding that though going at tremendous pressure, and with all the force of their 500-horse power, the movement of the connecting rods, plunging away with an oily ease, causes not the least vibration. At each fresh start the immense drum over forty feet in circumference round which the steel cables coil and uncoil, speeds round so rapidly as to cause a pleasant zephyr in the heated room, and the cables to which the cages are appended, seem to leap to the top of the lofty shaft frame and to drop over the pulleys vertically into the shaft. The swift movement of the engines, and the gliding of the cables. That can lift six tons at the rate of thirty feet a second, is fascinating and leaves an impression not soon effaced. The signal, a steel spring, moved by a lever pulled from the pit's bottom by a wire rope, and falling on a gong, keeps incessantly striking, for lowering or lifting the coal-laden cages, and at times a precious human freight, which is done with seemly care. The engines are of an improved modern type for winding; they are built by Oliver, of Chesterfield[extracted from the Nanaimo Free Press of June 28.
