The thesis focuses on the antagonism of western media in respect to the uprising of China. The author tries to give reasons for this perspective by analyzing reports of German mass media. , Abstract: China's global influence spreads. Its dynamic development affects our daily life in Western countries. In the past China's economic boom touched daily life in the West most visibly through the 'made-in-China' label on everything from clothes to computers. But in recent years the influence reached a new stage which can't be measured anymore just by widgets and gadgets developments like decreasing consumer prices for textiles, increasing world market prices for natural resources or an increasing global competition influence our daily life. Therefore, much attention has been paid to China's rise. This especially holds true for Western media. Scanning western media reports one can observe strong a certain kind of antagonism about China's development. On one hand, China is pressed for reforms on all fronts. But on the other hand, China's success causes worries and is often described as a threat or danger to the western economy. It is not the fact that China's reforms are criticized, which is striking. Criticism can be an indispensable and valuable tool to accompany a country's development. It is the overall negativity...
