Excerpt from That Blessed Baby: A Farce in One Act Scene. - The seashore house of Miss Palmer's brother. In front, the lawn, shaded by trees. In the centre, front, a small table and two rocking-chairs of the summer piazza variety. Back, the house, with an open window near centre, and a door right. The door is approached by porch, with a bench on each side. (Curtain rising shows Wilton seated on one of the benches of the porch.) Wilton. How shall I say it? How shall I say it? I thought I had it down pat, but waiting here for her has driven it all out of my head. What little brain I have always seems to wobble when I'm with her. And if she meets my little effort with one of those liquid-air glances of hers I'm done for. But it's now or never. Let me see, I was going to begin - (Looks at his watch.) Great Scott! Eleven o'clock! Half an hour of precious time lost already, and the boat leaves at twelve. Of course she's keeping me waiting on purpose. It's part of my penance. Oh, yes, she's going to make me eat humble pie, all right. But I think, I hope, that is, that afterward she'll be nice and - (He whistles softly for a few moments.) Well, if she isn't, I must take my medicine like a little man, that's all, without squeaking. I don't doubt she has made up her mind already what she will do with me. (Helen, with roll of knitting in her hand, appears at doorway in flat..
