Excerpt: .an apothecary, kept a dispensary for the poor; for she had read books of physic, and had learned of her late husband to make up many kinds of medicines, which she administered with great judgment to her indigent neighbours. As she had not a great deal of work for her maid, she employed her pretty much in making up salves, c-and, among other things, taught her to prepare, in the most wholesome and palatable way, caudle, L-arley-water, and all those other articles which come under the denomination of kitchen physic. She also instructed her how to dress blisters, c. in the tenderest manner, and gave her many other useful directions respecting the management of the sick. Mrs. Rawlins was pretty far advanced in years when Molly Shepherd went to live with her, and at times suffered a great deal from a stomach complaint, which none of her own remedies could reach; nay, it baffled the art of the most experienced physicians whom she consulted, and at last deprived Molly of an excellent mistress, whom she loved and respected. Mrs. Rawlins left her faithful servant a legacy of twenty pounds, which put it in her power to marry, and, accordingly, in a7few months she became the wife of Robert Wilden, a journeyman carpenter, the young man before mentioned as her sweetheart. Seven years this worthy couple lived together in great harmony and comfort; but then DeAa -11 separated them, and Mrs. Nilden was left a...
