Excerpt: . . . you a copy of this reply, marked F. Early on the morning of the 7th instant I repaired to the camp at Lawrence, and found them busily engaged on their fortifications and drilling their forces, and had a full and satisfactory interview with the committee appointed by the forces in Lawrence in relation to the impending difficulties. So far as the execution of the laws was concerned, we had no difficulty in coming to a satisfactory understanding. It was at once agreed that the laws of the Territory should have their regular course, and that those who disputed them should, if they desired to do so, test that question in the judicial tribunals of the country; that in the meantime no resistance should be made to their due execution, and the citizens of Lawrence and vicinity were, when properly called on, to aid in the arrest of anyone charged with their violation, and to aid and assist in the preservation of the peace and good order of society; while on my part I gave them every assurance in my power that they should be protected in all their rights, and defended against all unlawful aggressions. It is proper that I should say that they claimed that a large majority of them had always held and inculcated the same views. The assurance I received entirely satisfied me that no one against whom awrit was issued was then in Lawrence; that they had all fled; and...
