Excerpt from After Hour Idyls HE poems collected in this volume were T penned with no thought of their ultimate publication. They came to the writer in the midst of a busy life, and were jotted down from time to time, in odd moments of leisure, for his own gratification and the partial eyes of friend ship. It has been suggested repeatedly, and from many sources, that a more permanent form should be given to them. These suggestions, though still thought very ? attering, he trusts, in the accomplishment, will afford his friends some pleasure.
