INTRODUCTION To the first volume of his remarkable series of autobiographical novels, August Strindberg gave the name of The Bondwoman s Son. The allusion was twofold--to his birth and to the position which fate, in his own eyes, seemed to have assigned him both as man and artist. If we pass on to the third part of his big trilogy, To Damascus, also an autobiographical work, but written nearly twenty years later, we find The Stranger, who is none but the author, saying: I was the Bondwoman s Son, concerning whom it was writ-- Cast out this bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the free woman s son. And The Lady, back of whom we glimpse Strindberg s second wife, replies: Do you know why Ishmael was cast out? It is to be read a little further back--because he was a scoffer! And then it is also said: He will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man s hand against him; and he shall dwell in opposition to all his brethren. These quotations should be read in conjunction with still another, taken from Strindberg s latest play, The Great Highway, which, while being a sort of symbolical summary of his life experience, yet pierces the magic circle of selfconcern within which too often he has remained a captive. There The Hermit asks: You do not love your...
