Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: .are generally in stripes, and sometimes shaded, like the rainbow, and the great effort of the manufacturer is to bring off the shades, from light to dark, almost imperceptibly; sometimes these carpets are made checked, and in squares, like a draught-board. Scotch carpeting is at the present time coming very much into vogue; it is called the three-piled imperial, and is reckoned to be but little inferior in texture, look and wear, to Brussels. Besides the carpets already mentioned, there is, also, Dutch carpeting, woven much in the same way as the plain Venetian, some of them being made with cow-hair. The making of carpets comprise many other branches of the arts and manufactures besides weaving. There is the spinning and dying of the yarn, and the proper method of preparing numerous articles used in the work; above all, there is the skill of the designer;...
