Excerpt: . . . determinations. Specifically, FSA did not make an annual eligibility determination for every year in which it provided payments, as regulations require. From 1999 through 2005, 69 of the 108 estates did not receive determinations for every year in which they received payments, and some FSA field offices approved groups of estates for payments without reviewing each estate individually. Moreover, documentation supporting the determinations was often either nonexistent or vague. For example, 20 of the determinations had no documented explanation for why the estate remained active. In other cases, FSA approved eligibility based on insufficient explanations for why the estate remained open - such as the heirs stating that they wanted to keep it open on the advice of a lawyer or an accountant without specifying the reasons why. We also found that although the minutes of FSA county committee meetings indicated approval of payments to estates, the associated files did not contain critical documents that might validate why the estates were still active for reasons other than to obtain farm program payments. According to FSA field officials, many eligibility determinations were either not done or not done thoroughly, in part because of a lack of sufficient personnel and time, as well as competing priorities for carrying out farm programs. FSA cannot be assured that millions of dollars in farm payments it made are proper because FSA does not have management controls, such as computer matching, to verify that it is not making payments to deceased individuals. Instead, according to the FSA field officials, FSA relies on self-certifications by farming operations that the information provided is accurate and that the operations will inform FSA...
