The vast concourse, the general joy, the fervent good wishes, which attended the Farmer of North Bend to the busy quay Of yonder beautiful river, on his way to the White House, in the Capital of the nation. The hushed silence, the heaving bosoms, the riveted attention of the mighty throng upon the shore, when, from the upper deck of the majestic vessel, with head bared , and eyes streaming, he took solemn and affecting leave of his friends for the last time, reminding them, as it were prophetically, that they might see his face no more and for which words (as in that most tender and pathetic of all leave-takings between the great apostle of the Gentiles and his bretheren at Ephesus,) they sorrowed most of all. And again, more recently, when he whose untimely death we...
