S. alliance relationships or security cooperation activities more broadly. On the face of it, the sea-basing concept implies a devaluation of the U. S. land-based overseas presence and raises uncomfortable questions about the extent and character of American alliance commitments and tendencies toward unilateralism in political and military decision making. Recently, the Navy has shown signs of recognizing this problem by popularizing the notion of a Thousand-Ship Navy leveraging allied maritime capabilities to meet the transnational security challenges of the current environment. What this means in practical terms, however, remains quite unclear. More generally, it is plain that a major disconnect persists between what might for convenience be called the global posture perspective on U. S. overseas presence on the one hand and the sea basing perspective on the other, reflecting the dominant role in the former of the Army and Air Force, and in the latter of the Navy and Marine Corps. The United States needs a vision and strategy for overseas presence that is both fully joint and genuinely combined. While impressive progress has indeed been made, it is clear that we are not yet at the end of that road. Notes...
