CODE NAME LISE (PAPERBACK)

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In Code Name Lise, we deal with the idea of sinking warships with shore-bound artillery. It can be done and was done in history many times before, but you need them close to you, almost at a dangerous close range. They must be ambushed unexpectedly and destroyed, or you will be in deep trouble as they call in heavy airstrikes or used their long-range weapons to maximum effect. And that is the biggest problem you will face in this scenario, the air threat. All modern warships are armed with helicopters and South African warships at times have the Denel Rooivalk attack helicopter with them. A helicopter that is deadly and feared with much reason. The question I wanted to be answered in this book was to see if a Rooivalk attack beast can be shot down and if so, how. They are armoured against 23mm shells, they are faster than an Apache and their pilots are aggressive fellows. You will normally not get close enough to shoot a Rooivalk down, she can see in the darkness and she has deadly missiles outranging any MANPAD or anti-aircraft gun. Her ECM and E-ECM systems are world-class. Thus, you need to surprise her, get her close enough and down her in the first few shots or you are dead when she counter-attacks. There is a way, a maskirovka. Foxtrot and his men crossed into Northern Kwazulu-Natal, South Africa, after the ambush in southern Mozambique where Angelique is almost killed during Code Name Phoenix. He wants his enemy, the naval squadron searching for him and his Q-ship, the EBS Orlando, within gunnery range and destroy them. If not destroyed, then at least severely damaged, before running...
