

Policing the Fringe The Curious Life of a Small-Town Mountie

By Charles Scheideman

Harbour. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 320 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.4in. x 0.9in. From the 1960s through the 1980s, RCMP Sergeant Charlie Scheideman spent much of his time patrolling the dark corners of the Interior of British Columbia where the citizens would meet the modern criteria for redneck: if their veranda collapsed it would kill more than four dogs; they think harrass is two words, and so on. Such places werent much fun to police but they were full of characters, many of whom make their way into Charlies entertaining book, Policing the Fringe. We meet Walter and Wilbur, two Hixon hillbillies who went on a bender and decided it would be fun to stagger out onto the Cariboo Highway with a rifle and hold up passing cars, which worked well enough until they held up a motorhome from Alaska that turned out to be better armed than they were. We meet Petre, the hard-working hermit who was cheated out of his savings by three slick-talking mining promoters and waited to take his revenge--with an axe. With wry humour and a policemen's eye for relevant detail, Scheideman recounts events that range from the ridiculous to the horrific to the tragic....
