Excerpt from The Davis and Furber Machine Company and the Men Who Made It, 1832-1908 North Andover early became noted for the patriotism, the states manship, the public spiritedness, and the enterprise of its citizens, among whom were Governor Bradstreet, Governor Phillips, and other Colonial dignitaries. It is not strange, then, that men of such parts made this town one of the pioneer manufacturing towns of the country. The demand for food could be met abundantly at their very doors. The problem presented by the demand for suitable clothing was more perplexing. The mother country for various reasons did not encourage the making of cloth on this side of the ocean. There was no money with which to buy clothing, no tools or machines for making cloth, and little or no knowledge of the art. The sturdy colonists of Andover were not long in solving this problem. Notwithstanding the opposition from across the ocean, crude spinning wheels and hand looms began to multiply in their homes. The town in 1787 made an appeal to the good sense and virtuous disposition of the female...
