

Tony Orca (Paperback)

By MR Joseph John Rizzuto

Createspace, United States, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Tony Orca, is a story about a killer whale pod migrating from the Bering Sea to Baja California and the behavior of their leader, later in the story named Tony Orca by a newspaper reporter. This is an environmental story describing the attack on the habitat of all marine life by the human being s reckless, wanton, selfish disregard for the environment. The story begins with a prologue describing the killer whale, and the description of Tony s birth. The story continues thirty years later, when Tony is well into middle age, at the beginning of a migration and describes the problems they encounter during their movement south along the coast of North America. Tony is the product of a triggered gene mutation called the quadrathoric gene mutation as described by Professor Joseph Salem, a Nobel Prize laureate. All male animal species except the human being are a carrier of this gene. It is triggered occasionally in every fourth child of the father. The child must be a male. Female offspring are not affected. The gene is triggered by extreme stress, causing the...
