Excerpt: . the gold found in placer diggings is in small particles, though sometimes a large nugget is found. Probably the largest ever found was at Ballarat, Australia. This was worth over forty-six thousand dollars. Here are some of the workers in a gold mine. The men are drilling in a true fissure gold vein in order to blast out the ore, and the patient donkey is waiting to take his car to the elevator as soon as it is filled. This miner is getting ready to blast the rock. First he made a hole in the rock, and then fastened in it something that looks a little like a candle. It isn't a candle that we should care to light in the ordinary way, however, for it is made of dynamite. After the miner connects a fuse with it, he will pack the earth tightly in about it. As soon as he lights the fuse, there will be a call to run. Then, very quickly, there will come a terrific explosion. Great masses of rock will be torn away. The miners will throw these into holes in the bottom of the tunnel, and they will fall into cars in a tunnel below. There are different ways of getting the gold from the rocks. That which contains very little gold is sent to the cyanide mill. We might see no sign of gold in these rocks. The stones are put through three different mills...
