Excerpt from The Crucifixion of Jesus Christ: Anatomically Considered, in a Letter Addressed to the Rev. Eli Noyes, D. D. At His Request Rev. Eli Noyes, D. D. Sir. - You ask me in your letter of the 12th ult., for an Anatomical explanation of the text: - John 19th; 84th, - But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water To this, I now reply: - That blood should flow from such a wound might naturally be expected. The wound was so large and wide, that Christ afterwards said to Thomas: Reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side. Would He have said this, if the wound- had not been large enough to admit a man s hand! When he said, Behold my hands - the expression is, - 11 Reach hither thy finger. The Greek word - logke - translated spear - was the Roman lancca, or lance; and every military man had one, - besides other armor. Its length was generally about half that of the pike, which was from sixteen to eighteen feet, sometimes longer. The lance, therefore, was about eight or nine feet long, and was sometimes called the half pike. It consisted of a strong, stiff, wooden shaft, or handle, armed at once, or both ends with a sharp penetrating weapon called the dark, The dart was made before that time - of iron, or brass - long, broad and sharp, with two edges, and pointed at the end. The lance, of course, could be used, either to cut, or thrust an enemy: and by having two edges, easily penetrated the fleshy parts...
