Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Mine Signboards The Bureau of Mines publishes this paper with a view to increasing safety in mining operations. The purpose of the paper is to draw attention to the need of signboards in the underground workings of mines, and to suggest a set of universal symbols for adoption throughout the mining districts of the United States. As indicating the natural tendency of man to utilize signs and signboards of various kinds, it seems desirable, before discussing the subject in its relation to mines, to point out some of the uses to which such devices have been put in the past. The use of symbols and signs antedates history. The Egyptians thousands of years ago employed hieroglyphics and crude sketches of animals and birds in the development of a sign language. Such systems were continued for centuries by various nations of early days. The aboriginal tribes of the American Continent used a sign language. Many pioneers in their journeys through the wilderness gained valuable information regarding the country through crude markings on prominent trees or rocks along a trail. After the development of written languages, the use of signboards for various purposes became universal. In recent times their use has developed rapidly in every civilized country on the globe. In Germany especially, in addition to the signboards employed by industrial institutions, there appear on every hand admonitions, directions, and laws printed on placards or boards and displayed in prominent public places. Electrical signs are now widely used. In the larger cities all over the world vast sums of money are spent in advertising by means of electrical displays. Direction signs are found in railway stations and in public buildings...
