National Academies Press, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. National Patterns of RD Resources is an annual report issued by the National Center for Science and Engineering Statistics (NCSES) of the National Science Foundation, which provides a national view of current patterns in funding of RD activities in government, industry, academia, federally funded research and development centers, and non-profits. Total RD funds are broken out at the national level by type of provider, type of recipient, and whether the RD is basic, applied, or developmental. These patterns are compared both longitudinally versus historical RD amounts, and internationally. This report series, which is based on input from several censuses and surveys, is used to formulate policies that, e.g., might increase incentives to support different types, sources, or recipients of RD than is currently the case. To communicate these RD patterns, each report is composed of a set of tabulations of national RD disaggregated by type of donor, type of recipient, and type of RD. While this satisfies many key user groups, the question was whether some modifications of the report could attract a wider user community and at the same time provide more useful information for current users. National Patterns of RD Resources: Future Directions for Content and Methods addresses the following questions: (1) what additional topics and tabulations could be presented without modifying the current portfolio of RD censuses and surveys, (2) what additional topics and tabulations might be presented by expanding these current data collections, (3) what could be done to enhance international comparability of the tabulations, (4) since much of the information on non-profit RD providers and recipients is estimated from 15 year-old data, what impact might this be having on the quality of the associated National Patterns tabulations, (5) what statistical...
