Grand Mal Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 244 pages. Benny tries to ignore the payment-overdue messages he keeps getting from Forget What, a memory removal company. Bennys a slacker, after all, and couldnt pay them even if he wanted to. Then people start trying to kill him, and his life suddenly depends on finding out what memories he has forgotten. Benny relies on his wits, latent skills, and new friends as he investigates his own past; delving deeper and deeper into the underworld of criminals, bad cops, and shady news organizations, all with their own reasons for wanting him to remain ignorant or die. Walking Shadow is a future-noir science fiction mystery novel with action, humor, suspense, smart dialogue, and a driving first person narrative. Heres a fascinating twist on the murder mystery. Benny is addicted to forgets, but now his life depends on remembering what he forgot about the judges killing. In a warped future Chicago, he has to thread his way though a maze of double and triple-crosses, with crooked cops and underground criminals all out to get him. What really makes it memorable is Bennys unique voice, a wry and witty tone of noir. --Lois Tilton, Short fiction reviewer for Locus Magazine Johns novel entertains while asking big questions--how much can you forget and still be you And how much would you be willing to forget to be someone else Fun and full of ideas. --Maureen McHugh, Author of After the Apocalypse. In a cross between Raymond Chandler and Philip K Dick, Johns expertly explores themes of identity and morality. He has built a splendid dystopian Chicago -- not quite what we know -- in this thrilling noir speculation. As his protagonist weaves his way through his own past and an askew future Chicago, the reader must untangle this...
