Excerpt: .largely to their. uuiversities, and these drew their potential material. from the ranks of the people. It is stated that oneseventh ofthe students in the Scotch universities are the sons of wage-making artisans and peasants. Readers of The Bonnie Brier Bush can understand how this may be. England s first care, after establishing her authority in Upper Egypt, was the endowment of a university in the Soudan as a memorial to General Gordon. All the great missionary organizations have established colleges wherever possible as perennial fountains of regenerative influence. It was not folly, but wisdom, that led the friends of the freedmen to found in the South such nuclei of progress, and it will be not wisdom, but folly, to permit them to languish. The administrators of the Peabody legacy promote the great objects of that benefaction judiciously by assisting institutions that send out a constant stream of well educated men and women to be the instructors by teaching and example of all with whom they are associated. All the industrial education so much needed will thrive stronger and faster if the higher education is fostered than if it is neglected. These two means of doing good to the Negro race are not antagonistic, not competitive. They are allies, mutually helpful. The friends of the industrial education will make a grave mistake if they undertake to decry the other. They ought to be as anxious as any that institutions of the intellectual education should...
