Excerpt from The Debutante, 1889 The Johns Hopkins University owes its foundation to the liberality of the Baltimore merchant whose name it bears. He died on the twenty-fourth of December, 1873, nearly eighty years of age, leaving a large fortune, most of which he gave in two nearly equal amounts for the endowment of a University and for the endowment of a Hospital. He directed that, when the Hospital was completed, it should become a part of the Medical School of the University. Many years before his death he began to cherish the idea of establishing these two institutions, and the letter of instructions signed by him shows the broad and enlightened views which he held with respect to the welfare of mankind. At the same time his specific bequests were very simple, and he left to his Trustees the decision of all details. The University was incorporated under the general laws of the State of Maryland before the death of the founder, and soon after his death the Trustees held their first business meeting, on the 10th of February, 1874. The first President of the University, who is still in office, was elected in December of that year, and entered upon his duties in the following May. The instruction of the University began in the autumn of 1876, and has been gradually extended and improved since that time. The University Buildings are placed in the heart of the city, within sight of the Washington Monument, and near to a large number of literary and educational establishments. They include a central building, in which are the offices of administration and the class-rooms for the ancient languages. Directly west of this...
