In their affliction, they will earnestly seek Me (Hosea 5:15, NAS). Myles Munroe once said, The religious are cowards because they want everything perfect all the time, but those who are Kingdom-minded aren't afraid of anything! That struck me to the core because truer words have scarcely been uttered. If you're a faithful churchgoer yet you remain bound in fear under the pressure of hardships, you have yet to transition from being religious to Spirit-led. Spirit-driven people experience pockets of fear, absolutely, but knowing the secret of overcoming it (walking in faith) is key. Overcomers praise instead of murmur and give thanks for the trials because they know in their inner-most being that God has already resolved the issue and that it will work for good because they love Him. The Bible expressly states Christ came to abolish religion; therefore we, Christ followers, are not to be religious but Kingdom. In other words, instead of trying with futility to do all the right things all the time so that everything will go our way all the time, rest. Well-meaning religious folks are exhausted, but when we abandon religious traditions made by man so as to control people, we can finally be free. We are then free to understand that we're living in a condemned world that has zero to offer God's people; free to endure tumultuous situations without shame and free to praise God in faith through every burden of life. Freedom means we have great expectation that He will be glorified, He has already delivered us from evil, and that His promises will prove themselves fulfilled as the end result. Only Kingdom-minded people can suffer intense...
