Outskirts Press. Paperback. Condition: New. Carole Petersen Dwinell (illustrator). 54 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.1in. x 0.2in. Accurate and artful pencil drawings capture the desert creatures that Handsome Bill, the House Mouse encounters when he is invited to come visit his friends unusual home in the desert, high up in a saguaro cactus! In a cactus Rattlesnakes, flash floods, scorpions, a tortoise eating flowers are but a few of the eye opening scenarios that the two friends encounter. An educational adventure into the lives of the desert population, flora and fauna, weather and distance. He finds out about tarantulas and tarantula wasps (now theres a scary story!) and about finding high ground when it rains way off in the mountains on the edge of the desert. Normally he happily lives in a great big house with his own tiny mouse hole, daily little food gifts from the house kids, Ben and Sally, nice warm rags to curl up in . . . If you were to look out the back door of this nice house, the desert looks pretty. Its calm, the colors are interesting and if youve lived in the same place for a while . . . it is definitely an adventure worth considering . . . especially if you are a mouse! Little does Handsome Bill know what he is getting into. Friend Cactus Joe fails to mention that its full of quite different creatures than Ben and Sally. Follow Handsome Bill as he meets up with all kinds of bugs and plants, coyotes and owls. The food is different and whats this about eating a drink of water The desert is rich in adventure for everyone . . . including mice! Author Edith Nettleton has for years been a storyteller for grade school children, was a docent...
