Excerpt from Illustrated Catalogue of the Important Collection of Ancient Arms and Weapons and Accoutrements, Collected by Mr. Theodore Offerman, of New York: To Which Have Been Added Other Valuable Specimens Contributed by Several Well Known Collectors MY dear mr. Kirby: You have asked me to say a few words about the present collection of Arms and Armor, on the ground that i had long been a collector and that I might there fore comment helpfully upon the text of this. Catalogue and upon the nice things: which are soon to be sold. Be this help even a little, I am glad to send you these lines. For while one can claim to be at least an old local collector, whose practical memories of sales, go back to the Cogniat (1877) and Carleton Gates (about 1880) Collections, he need. Hardly maintain that he knows a/u, fond the ins! And outs of a subject as extended and difficult as ancient arms and armor. Experience in collect ing, however, certainly does aid one not a little (at great initial cost) in separating the good objects from the bad. The fact of the matter is, that most of our earlier collectors had to depend for their expert knowledge upon the arms which they purchased, or failed to purchase, at public sales; and you will, of course, recall thatit is only within very recent years that arms. And armor appeared in American museums. Before this, he who had the taste for collecting these beautiful and-very rare objects had either to go abroad for his training or to glean what information he could - unsatisfactory at the best for his purpose - from the shelves of libraries. As...
