Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: .in the modus operandi of imparting it that theories differ. While some think it should be confined to the last two years of the boy s school age, others that it must be continued from the Kindergarten work, and throughout the school age be carried forward and adapted to the requirements of the children as they advance in age and intellect. The experiments made at Boston and St. Louis dealt only with boys of high-school age, consequently while proving that manual training was disciplinary and educational, the main question was not touched. Investigations had always dealt with schools of the higher grade, and it was not until the grand principle of Kindergarten work had been fully recognised as furnishing a system of educational training perfectly in accordance with the requirements of childhood, and that it contained the true principles of the genuine philosophy of education, that...
