Excerpt from The Musgrove Ranch: A Tale of Southern California The day had been intensely warm, with little of the ocean-breeze to moderate the heat; but now the sun had set behind the great shoulder of the mountain to the west of the Hermosa settlement, and in a moment, as it seemed, the temperature fell and a cool air sprang up, waving the foliage of the eucalyptus grove which formed a semicircle round the upper portion of the Musgrove Ranch. It was the principal ranch of the valley, with the oldest and best cared for orange groves, the largest olives, the most umbrageous fig and walnut trees. The long, low house looked a very inviting place, with its broad piazzas festooned with a variety of exquisite creeping plants, and deeply shaded to the west by an enormous live-oak, whose vicinity had been especially considered when the house was built.
