Excerpt from The Philosophy of Religion, Vol. 2: A Critical and Speculative Treatise of Mans Religious Experience and Development in the Light of Modern Science and Reflective Thinking A certain obvious change in the point of view and in the method of discussion now becomes necessary in order to make further progress toward a systematic and satisfactory treatment of the more important problems of the philosophy of religion. The method of the phenomenology of mans religious experience is comparative, historical, and psychological. But the method for determining the truth of these phenomena is critical, synthetic, speculative. As was explained with sufficient fullness in the last chapter, it is therefore proposed from this point onward to subject the religious conceptions, beliefs, sentiments, and practices which humanity has cherished - especially in the form which they have attained as the result of their highest development in the past - to the judgment of that supreme court which universal reason provides. It is fitting, then, that we should remind ourselves anew of certain rights which may be considered as already guaranteed, and not less of certain...
