

The Chequers

By James Runciman

Aegypan. Paperback. Condition: New. 120 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.3in. James Runciman was an English teacher, author and journalist. He was born at Cresswell and educated at Ellington school, and then for two years in the naval school at Greenwich, Kent. He became a pupil-teacher at North Shields ragged school, and after further training, entered the service of the London School Board. While still a schoolmaster, he read for himself at night, and attempted journalism. He soon wrote regularly for the Teacher, the Schoolmaster, and Vanity Fair, where he became a sub-editor. Subsequently he confined himself solely to the profession of journalism. He wrote on a variety of topics, but his best known work described the life of the fishermen of the North Sea. The Chequers is described as Being the Natural History of a Public-House, Set Forth in a Loafers Diary. Its a series of stories about a pub, told by a regular. As Runciman puts it: If you want to know how Drink really acts on the inner life of this nation you must actually live among the forlorn folk who drink Circes draft, and you must live as their equal, their friend, their confidant. So he...
