Excerpt: . . . so far as it respected their present feelings and future prospects, we shall pass it over, and only mention the information which Jeanie received from Butler concerning her sisters elopement, which contained many particulars that she had been unable to extract from. her father. Jeanie learned, therefore, that, for three days aftei her pardon hud arrived. Effie had been the inmate of her fathers house at St. Leonards--that the interviews betwixt David and his erring child, which had taken place before she was liberated frm prison, had been touching in the extreme; but Butler could not suppress his opinion, that, when he was freed from the apprehension of losing her in a manner so horrible, her father had tightened the bands of discipline, so as, in some degree, to gall the feelings, and aggravate the irritability of a spirit naturally impatient and petulant, and now doubly so from the sense of merited disgrace. On the third night, Effie disappeared from St. Leonards, leaving no intimation whatever of the route she had taken. Butler, however, set out in pursuit of her, and with much trouble traced her towards a little landingplace, formed by a small brook which enters the sea be twixt Musselburgh and Edinburgh. This place, which has been since made into a small harbour, surrounded by many villas and lodging-houses, is now termed Portobellr At this time it was surrounded by a waste common, covered with furze, and unfrequented, save by fishing-boats, ind now and then a smuggling...
