The Russian society was also active in pioneer work, and during the wars in the Balkan provinces, 1876-78, its personnel included five hundred sisters of mercy and five hundred male nurses. An important outcome of the British National Aid or Red Cross Society was the utilization of the income arising from the large balance left in its exchequer after the Franco-German war, in the training of female nurses at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley. It was not until the outbreak of the South African war that the British Red Cross Society was called upon to extensively deal with work on behalf of our own soldiers. In January, 1899, a new body, the Central British Red Cross Council, was, with the approval of the War Office, appointed to deal with Red Cross work throughout the empire, and was composed of representatives of the original National Aid Society to the Sick and Wounded in War, of the St. John Ambulance Association, the St. Andrew Ambulance Association, the headquarters for the work in Scotland, the Army Nursing Reserve, and of the Admiralty and War Office. Queen Alexandra, then Princess of Wales, was president of the Council; Lord Knutsford, chairman; Sir John Furlcy, hon. treasurer; and Major T. McCulloch, hon. secretary. The rapid enrolling of nurses by the Reserve, the vast shipments of comforts for the wounded, and the general enthusiasm of all classes in...
