Excerpt from The Cathedrals of England and Wales, Their History, Architecture and Associations, Vol. 2 of 2: With a Series of Rembrandt Plates and Many Illustrations in the d104 The documentary history of Lichfield Cathedral is unusually imperfect, and the date of the building of the first church on the site can only be determined approximately. But from the Venerable Bede we learn that St. Chad's remains were translated from the mother church at Stowe to the new church of St. Peter, the first of the three cathedrals to be reared on the present site. This church of St. Peter must therefore have been in existence some time before the year 735, when Bede died. It was no doubt a comparatively small and humble structure. After the Conquest this work of English hands was replaced by a Norman church on a grander scale, but here again the exact date of the rebuilding is uncertain. This church also, with the exception of a few fragments, has vanished. It was gradually rebuilt, after it had stood for rather more than a century, the western part of the choir, the oldest portion of the present cathedral, being probably begun about the year 1200. The south transept was next taken in hand, followed some few years later by the north transept; for one at least of these is known, from an old grant giving a right of quarrying stone, to have been in progress about the year 1235. Next the nave was rebuilt, the work being begun about the middle of the same century; and the west front, which does not appear to have been constructed quite continuously with the rest, is dated about...
