Excerpt from What the Rising of the Dead Should Mean: A Sermon Delivered in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church New York City Sunday, March 27, 1921 There is no doubt whatever that the cause of this was a well-authenticated belief in the resurrection of Jesus Christ. This was the Church's own view, and it was the reason which she gave for her power on the earth. It is very striking to notice how this entered into the first preaching of Christianity. Every doctrine has its supreme hour. The note of modern preaching is the Fatherhood and Kingdom of God. The note of the Reformation doctrine was that of justification by faith. But these early days were distinctively the hour of the resurrection. In all the preaching of the apostles there is the sound of triumph. They never represented Christ as merely escaping from the prison-house of death, but spoke of His victory over death as the thing which has changed the world. When His death had been ascertained a deep sigh of relief had risen from the anxious hearts of His enemies. They little knew that He had died deliberately, knowing that in dying He was conquering death. This preaching of the resurrection is manifest throughout the whole story of the Acts of the Apostles. Peter preached it at Jerusalem, and Paul preached it at Athens, and everywhere else. Paul's own conversion was caused, according to his own account, by the assurance that Jesus Who had died was still alive and had spoken to him. Through out the whole of these narratives we hear of men witnessing and preaching the resurrection of Jesus Christ. That was their gospel, that their...
