Curtis O. Sanders, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.My passion to be a Baptist deacon started as a child growing up in the sixties. Church was the only place I saw Black people with power. Most of the older members of my church had little, if any, education, and had no real concept of theological doctrine. They declared their love for Jesus based solely on what they felt in their heart. They Praised God to express their gratitude for being able to survive in a blatantly racist society. Their song of praise was God have mercy on a sinner like me. I found this type of faith admirable. I joined the army of the Lord armed with my Bible in one hand, and the blood stained banner of Jesus in the other. The uniqueness of the Black church is a reflection of the African American experience being rooted in slavery. I live in Harlem, and on any given Sunday Black churches are filled with tourist from all over the world. I have had meaningful conversations with some of these tourist regarding how much they enjoy the liveliness of the Black church. Overall, they view the Black church as a powerful spiritual experience. They love Gospel music. They love the unique style of African American preachers. Some have commented, if church was this lively at home they would go to church more often. I question if these tourists would have the same appreciation for the Black church if they were enslaved with the countenance of Christianity. When I attended college I was introduced to White Evangelical Christians who proclaimed that Christianity is not a religion but a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. They proclaimed that the Bible and Christianity is...
