Excerpt from Elizabeth Haddon, a True Narrative of the Early Settlement of New Jersey The three daughters of John Haddon received the best education then bestowed on gentlewomen, with the exception of ornamental accomplishments. The spinet and mandolin, on which their mother had played with considerable skill, were of course banished and her gay embroidery was burned, lest it should tempt others to a like expenditure of time. The house was amply furnished; but with the simplest patterns and the plainest colors. An atmosphere of kindness pervaded the whole establishment, from father and mother down to the little errand-boy - a spirit of perfect gentleness, unbroken by any freaks of temper or outbursts of glee, as mild and placid as perpetual moonlight. The children in their daily habits reflected an image of home, as children always do. They were quiet, demure and orderly, with a touch of quaintness in dress and behavior. Their play things were so well preserved, that they might pass in good condition to the third generation; no dog's ears were turned in their books, and the moment they came from school they carefully covered their little plain bonnets from dust and flies. To those subduing influences were added the early consciousness of being pointed at as peculiar - of having a cross to bear - a sacred cause to sustain.
