Excerpt from McGill Outlook, Vol. 6: February 3, 1904 Scottish Universities, is the development of a collective university life, and that is one of the great features of the Union which we are met together for the purpose of supporting, and for the purpose of extending. The Union has achieved so complete a success that it has created the desire and the necessity for further extension. Much has been done, but more remains to do, and if it had not been for the very great success which the institution as it exists has achieved, we should not be met here to-day with the feeling that it is imperative upon all those who have the prosperity of this University at heart to do what in them lies to promote its further extension.
