Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .When Rollo was between ten and eleven years old he was seated one day in the little arbor which Jonas had built for him. He was playing with some bright stones and shells which his Uncle George had brought him from the seashore, setting them in rows on the edge of his comfortable bench or, again, marching them in columns as he had seen the soldiers go during training-week. One shell in particular, Rollo admired greatly. It was a large clam-shell in which was a beautiful picture of a light-house and a ship in the distance and below were the words Souvenir of Atlantic City. How pretty, thought Rollo, and how clever of a clam to decorate his home so! But I did not know that they could also write. While he was absorbed in these reflections he heard his mother s voice calling, Rol-lo, Rol-lo. At first, Rollo had a great mind not to go for he disliked being disturbed while he was busy with his shells. However, he finally decided it would be best to obey, so, gathering up his stones and placing the clam-shell in his pocket, he ran toward the house. In the entry he found his father, his mother, and Jonas awaiting him. It was evident from their expression that something of importance had happened.
