Excerpt: . there was every thing we wanted, both good and cheap. We could purchase eight ducks for a rupee, (a silver coin of about half-a-crown in value, ) and almost every thing else in the same proportion. We lived exceedingly well, and had nothing to do but to keep ourselves clean. On Christmas-day, we dined off roast ducks and green peas. Having in a great measure our liberty, although not actually discharged, and being allowed to do almost as we pleased, I and another purchased white hats, green under the brim, silk and other clothing, such as was worn by European gentlemen in that city; and having hired six black servants (the pay of labourers being about a penny a day) to attend upon us, to wash our feet, to carry us about in a palanquin, to fan us with a whisk, called a...
