Excerpt from A Survey of Prehistoric Sites in the Region of Flagstaff, Arizona The present report deals with an archeological survey of a small portion of northern Arizona lying between the San Francisco Peaks and the Little Colorado River. While the report includes most of the sites in the areas drained by Walnut Creek and Deadmans Wash, it purposely excludes sites on the intervening watershed. The report summarizes the results of a study extending through 10 summers (1916, 1919, 1921, 1923, and 1925 It aims to present three aspects: The distinctive features of individual ruins, the relations of the early cultures with those of neighboring regions, and the relations of occupied regions with features of the external environment. Such a survey can never be said to be complete, yet it is important that the present knowledge of the region be recorded.
