Neopoiesis Press, LLC, United States, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Frank Reardon was born in 1974 in Boston, Massachusetts and spent his first 28 years living there. Since then, he has lived all over the country, in places such as Alabama, Kansas City and Rhode Island. He currently lives in the Badlands of North Dakota, still looking for a way to get out. Frank has been published in various reviews, journals and online zines. His first book, Interstate Chokehold, was published by NeoPoiesis Press in 2009. Frank is in the process of completing a third poetry collection and intends to take up additional prose/fiction writing and perhaps clay pigeon shooting. Reviews Read Frank Reardon at your own risk. He ll open your heart with a corkscrew and leave you wide-eyed and longing for more.these are goddamned excellent poems. - Dan Fante, author of Chump Change, Kissed By a Fat Waitress and Mooch You re sitting in a dark room, alone, washing down Valium with coffee, wishing you could see the stars through the dirty window; instead, you see a reflection of yourself, the lines on your face heavier, the life in your eyes drained. You hope for something better: a better girl, a better place, a better you. Cigarette smoke cuts the bitterness for a second. You squint, through the haze, trying so hard to see something in yourself. The heater brightens the room when you take a drag. There s nothing left. May as well write about it and hope to hell someone comes along to share your coffee and your life, making those damn lines mean something more than just empty scars. - R L Raymond, editor, Pigeon Bike Press Frank Reardon s poetry is high-voltage! It s...
