Even in private practice, where there would be no obstacle to the free use of baths, how seldom do they form part of the treatment, unless there should happen to be any existing disease of the skin! In many instances, however, the digestive powers become deranged, and the general health is undermined, from a neglect to pay proper attention to the state of the skin; and a large proportion of the catarrhal, rheumatic, and nervous affections so prevalent in the variable climate of Great Britain, might be traced to the same source. The tendency to these complaints, as well as to pulmonary consumption, would be materially lessened, were persons, while in health, accustomed to attend to the functions of the skin, by the employment of bathing and cold ablutions more...
