Excerpt from Say It Right: A Handbook Designed to Help Preachers and All Who Speak in Public No man has a right to stand before an audience with a message unless he can assure them that they will hear what he has to say. I make this statement with confidence, because I know from experience that the man who is not naturally endowed with a public speaking voice can acquire one. I graduated from the University and from the Seminary with a weak voice, subject to hoarseness and constantly troubled with sore throat. These things need not be. I was fortunate at that time in coming under the tuition of a man who was a pioneer, on this continent, in natural voice development. Accepting the basic principles learned at that time, I think I have been able to enlarge them into a system that has, to say the least, been of great personal help and given excellent results in teaching. The substance of that material is given in this little book. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare...
