Beijing Alain Charles Advertising Limited. Paperback. Condition: New. 226 pages. Dimensions: 9.2in. x 6.1in. x 0.5in. To say that China is a nation in transition is both a statement of the obvious and also a massive understatement. In the last 30 years, this country of 1.4 billion people has experienced annual economic growth of 10 or more, which has brought it to the forefront of the world's trading nations. It has seen great shifts of population over half its citizens now live in cities compared with just one-fifth before the reform process began and huge changes to its social and legal structures. It has industrialized and modernized faster than any society has ever attempted before. China now looks forward to an era of consolidating that position and of evolving all of its political, legal, social and environmental structures to carry progress forward to 2020 and beyond. In eight chapters, the authors of this book describe how the Communist Party of China (CPC) led by General Secretary Xi Jinping intends to guide the country on its continuing path to greater prosperity. The chapters explore: China's economy and the steps needed to make it fit for the years ahead; the ongoing processes of reform and opening up; the rule of law in the specific context of Chinese society; and evolution of China's political systems. There are chapters on the subject of the people's livelihood, and on ecological matters; and on the shape of its industry, the adoption of new technologies, and recognition of a coming shift in the balance of manufacturing and service sectors. The book highlights the fact that China's progress to date has not been in any way accidental, but has been the outcome of a planned process, dating back to the late 1970s and the beginning of reform and opening up....
