Water Folk: Reconstructing an Ancient Aquatic Lifeway in Michoacan Western Mexico: Reconstructing an Ancient Aquatic Lifeway in Michoacan, Western Mexico (Paperback)

By Eduardo Williams

British Archaeological Reports, United Kingdom, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.This study of subsistence activities (fishing, hunting, gathering, and manufacture) in the Cuitzeo and Patzcuaro lake basins (Michoacan, Western Mexico) underscores the value of ethnoarchaeology as a tool for reconstructing the ancient aquatic lifeway in the territory of the Protohistoric Tarascan state (ca. AD 1450-1530), which flourished in an environment dominated by lakes, rivers, swamps and marshes. Mesoamerica was the only civilization in the ancient world that lacked major domesticated sources of animal protein; therefore, abundant wild aquatic species (fish, birds, reptiles, amphibians, insects and plants, etc.) all played strategic roles in the diet and economy of most Mesoamerican cultures, including the Tarascans.
